Imagine you are an anthropologist setting out to do research in any part of the Pacific including Australia. You have studied the findings of other anthropologists who have worked on similar topics and in similar ethnographic regions. Briefly outline the theoretical approach you would use to apply to a specific set of data; in other words, what would you study, and what would be your theoretical framework. Furthermore, defend your position and choice of topic, briefly.