People have been making, watching and writing about movies for just over a century. In a culture that increasingly relies on visual information, an understanding of the moving image is essential to understanding society.

Film Studies at the University of Sydney is a vibrant interdisciplinary program that develops this critical visual literacy. It equips students with a range of skills for understanding the social, cultural, aesthetic and political dimensions of cinema in different contexts and at different times and analysing cinema as a vital and yet everyday part of modern life.

Our program combines a broad range of Units of Study from across the Faculty of Arts and Social Sciences disciplines of Art History, English, Australian Literature, Digital Cultures, French, German, History, International and Contemporary Literary Studies, Italian, Japanese, Philosophy, Religion and Spanish. It also includes Units of Study from Sydney College of Arts and The Conservatorium.

Film can be studied at undergraduate level as a major within a degree, or single units of study can be taken as electives to complement other study in your degree. Students can also choose to continue on to undertake research at Honours and Postgraduate Research degree level.

Film Studies at Sydney University offers a most diverse and comprehensive approach to the study of film and film culture.
How should I plan my enrolment in Film Studies?

The Film Studies major is a well-designed balance of compulsory structure and guided student choice.
