Position Title | Graduate Communications and Engagement Consultant

Jacobs is a global provider of technical, professional and scientific services including engineering, architecture, construction, operations and project maintenance. Our client portfolio spans industrial, commercial and government clients across multiple markets and geographies.

About the opportunity

The Communications and Engagement discipline is playing an increasingly critical role in delivery of successful engineering, infrastructure and construction projects. We are seeking a Graduate to join the Planning, Environmental Management and Community Engagement section of Jacobs from February 2018. Communications and Engagement professionals play a key role in ensuring all project stakeholders and communities are well informed and engaged.

Your new role will require you to be a confident communicator. It will provide opportunities for you to work in a variety of contexts and projects across a range of sectors including transport, utilities, renewable energy and defence. Based in our North Sydney office, a supportive team will coach you in the industry standards required of a contemporary Communications and Engagement professional. You will become competent in a range of skills including the identification of project stakeholders, coordination, management and delivery of stakeholder and community communications, management of stakeholder needs and community enquiries, and the design, production and distribution of a range of communications across digital, written and verbal communication channels.

About You

Ideally you will have studied for a degree which includes courses in either communications, journalism, corporate, government, public or community relations, social sciences, sustainability, policy, planning or project management with a view to establishing a career pathway in Stakeholder Communications and Engagement. Vital to your success in this role you will have exceptional interpersonal skills, an ability to manage relationships with a wide range of stakeholders, confidence with technology and strong attention to detail for records management, as well as superior verbal and written communication skills.

Why Jacobs?

If you are focused and aspire to commence your career in a challenging and leading edge environment, then you will have a future with great possibilities with us. We create rewarding careers and ongoing development opportunities. We believe in collaboration and knowledge sharing, from global virtual teams to local work sharing options.

In our workplace people are respected and encouraged to fulfil their potential within a culture that positively supports diversity and inclusion.
