About Ascham School
www.ascham.nsw.edu.au

Ascham is one of the oldest girls' schools in Australia. It was founded by Miss Marie Wallis in 1886 with nine pupils in a Darling Point terrace. Miss Wallis named the school after Roger Ascham, tutor to England’s Queen Elizabeth I. The vision and vigour of Miss Wallis, followed by Mr Herbert Carter, (Principal from 1902 to 1914) who bought the large house Glenrock and its 2.6 hectares of grounds, secured the future of the school, when so many other small, privately-owned schools of the time did not survive. Ascham is located in Edgecliff – close to public transport.

The school's philosophy is to focus on the development of a solid foundation of skills and to educate every girl to fulfil her academic potential. In senior years, Ascham uses a modified version of the Dalton Plan of education which is central to the school's objective to develop organised, independent, self motivated, life-long learners.

In 2017, Ascham celebrates its 132nd anniversary: 132 years of continuous operation; 132 years of outstanding alumnae achievements; 132 years of building resilience, independence of spirit and generating women leaders across the globe.
