Values Education
Implicit and Explicit Teaching in the Secondary Setting

Monday 17 March 2008, 2–5pm
Education Building, the University of Sydney, Camperdown

CONTENT & FORMAT

Values education is mandatory in schools but is poorly supported in provision of resources and professional understanding. This course will explore an integrated curriculum approach to values education, which positions students’ skills and understanding in a global context. Following a brief interactive interrogation of the principles of the National Framework for Values Education, participants will explore applications across curriculum areas.

Values education is any explicit/implicit activity that promotes student knowledge of values and also develops particular skills. Thus a broad range of activities, including language learning, is recognised in research as contributing to students’ values development.

A case study school will be considered, which, as part of its integrated model, offers a Year 7-10 sequence of experiential global values programs developed by the High Resolves Initiative: poverty and injustice, identity and race, conflict resolution and collective action. The simulation games involved will be profiled. Different schools’ approaches to global values leadership for senior students will be explored.

Through guided group discussion, presentations and group activities, participants will acquire knowledge and understanding of the nature of global values education, and practical strategies for curriculum integration.

PRESENTER

Robyn Moloney recently competed a Doctorate of Education researching intercultural development in young learners. She is responsible for the global values program at the International Grammar School in Ultimo, Sydney where she is Director of Languages and Cultural Programs, and Coordinator of the Evening Language College. Robyn is also a leading language educator. Previously she held teaching positions in several Sydney secondary schools, and has worked on the HSC Examination Committee and BOS resource development.
