How does the present mould our understanding of the past? How does a knowledge of the past shape the way we view our present?

The Postgraduates of the Department of History at the University of Sydney will be holding a two-day conference on the 28th and 29th November, 2014 to address these questions. In recent years, the value of the past, and consequently the histories that academics write, have been objects of both interest and scorn from various forces in society. Given this, we hope to bring together postgraduates from Australia’s numerous respected universities to foster a discussion about the ways we treat the past in framing intellectual inquiry, whether as historians or working in other fields.

Abstracts of 200 words and a short bio of 100 words should be sent to the committee via the website:
