Sydney Law School permits the study of Labour and Employment Law through two primary Masters degrees:

- The Master of Laws (LLM)
- The Master of Labour Law & Relations (MLLR)

The Sydney LLM offers lawyers and law graduates the opportunity to undertake all units in Labour and Employment Law or alongside other disciplines such as Corporate, Securities & Finance Law, International Law or Taxation.

The MLLR is a unique qualification open to candidates with law or other relevant degrees that permits candidates to undertake half the units in Law and half in the Discipline of Work & Organisational Studies (WOS), through the Faculty of Economics and Business.

Candidates may also study Labour and Employment Law through a select Graduate Diploma:

- Graduate Diploma in Law (GradDipLaw)

WHO CAN APPLY?

The Sydney LLM and GradDipLaw are available to lawyers and law graduates while the MLLR is open to candidates with relevant degrees in other disciplines who wish to specialise in employment and industrial law. The MLLR attracts accountants and Human Resources professionals as well as legal practitioners and related professionals working in workplace relations.

COURSEWORK DEGREE PROGRAM & STRUCTURE

MASTER OF LAWS (LLM) - 48 CREDIT POINTS TO COMPLETE (8 UNITS OF STUDY)

GRADUATE DIPLOMA IN LAW (GRADDIPLAW) - 24 CREDIT POINTS TO COMPLETE (4 UNITS OF STUDY)

Candidates may select from the entire range of units of study available in any given year, subject to prerequisite requirements.

UNITS OF STUDY

The following is a selection of units of study offered in each area. Not every unit is offered each year. Select units in Labour and Employment Law may also be available to candidates enrolled in the Master of Business Law (MBL) or the Graduate Diploma in Corporate, Securities & Finance Law (GradDipCorpLaw).

Please consult the Sydney Law School website for the latest list and units available in other disciplines - www.law.usyd.edu.au
