SYDNEY CENTRE FOR INTERNATIONAL LAW (SCIL)

The Sydney Centre for International Law is a leading centre of international law research and policy in Australia and the Asia-Pacific region. The Sydney Centre produces innovative scholarship, trains new generations of international lawyers, and uses its expertise to inform public debates and law reform processes. The Centre's Associates and Affiliates are involved in teaching, research, media, case work and consultancy, and publish widely in most areas of international law.

The Sydney Centre is based in the University of Sydney's Faculty of Law and builds upon the Faculty's well-recognised history of research, scholarship and teaching in public and private international law. Our Advisory Board consists of distinguished international lawyers from around the world.

Look to the Sydney Centre for International Law for:

- Leading scholars and experts in public and private international law, including innovative interdisciplinary research;
- Vibrant programs of research and public events in:
 - Public International Law (including terrorism, conflict and security, law of the sea, international legal theory and history);
 - International Human Rights (including civil, political, social, economic and cultural rights, development, and refugees);
 - International Economic Law (including trade, investment arbitration and intellectual property);
 - Comparative and Global Law (including consumer, contract and commercial arbitration law, transnational law, Indonesian law, Chinese law and Islamic law);
 - International Environmental Law (including climate change law and a wide range of environmental and natural resource issues); and
 - Private International Law (including jurisdiction, choice of law, exclusionary doctrines and federalism).
- The Australian Journal of International Law, a peer-reviewed scholarly journal published in conjunction with the International Law Association (Australian Branch);
- A dynamic group of research students from around the world working in all areas of international law;
- Informed opinion and commentary on topical issues of international law and on law reform and public policy, including frequent appearances before federal parliamentary committees;
- Independent advice on issues of public and private international law;
- Short training courses and workshops for the professional development of government officials and civil servants, diplomats, police, judges, the military and others;
- Technical assistance services for foreign aid and development programs;
