UNIVERSITY CHANGES TO FACULTY STRUCTURE

In late April 2018, the current faculties of Dentistry, Medicine, Nursing and Midwifery, and Pharmacy will become schools within a new, combined faculty called the Faculty of Medicine and Health.

Existing faculty resolutions, including award course resolutions, will transfer to the new faculty. The University of Sydney (Governance of Faculties and University Schools) Rule 2016 (114 324KB PDF) covers the management and governance framework for the new University structure.

Any future changes to academic programs offered will be developed and approved through the University’s normal mechanisms involving the faculty, the Academic Board and the University Senate.

Detailed changes

1. The Faculty of Dentistry becomes the University of Sydney School of Dentistry, to be known as Sydney Dental School, within the Faculty of Medicine and Health. Information regarding Dentistry courses will be in the Dentistry handbook.

2. The Faculty of Medicine becomes the University of Sydney School of Medicine, to be known as Sydney Medical School, within the Faculty of Medicine and Health. Information regarding Medicine courses will be in the Sydney Medical School handbook.

3. The Faculty of Nursing and Midwifery becomes the University of Sydney Susan Wakil School of Nursing and Midwifery, to be known as Sydney Nursing School, within the Faculty of Medicine and Health. Information regarding Nursing and Midwifery courses will be in the Sydney Nursing School handbook.

4. The Faculty of Pharmacy becomes the University of Sydney School of Pharmacy, to be known as Sydney Pharmacy School, within the Faculty of Medicine and Health. Information regarding Pharmacy courses will be in the Pharmacy handbook.

Please note - all references to Faculty of Medicine will be changed to Sydney Medical School, within the Faculty of Medicine and Health and Faculty of Dentistry will be changed to Sydney Dental School, within the Faculty of Medicine and Health in the Admissions Guides for 2019.