Hi Jane,

Advice and agreed from Peter McCallum about pharmacy not submitting the learning outcomes for the pharmacy "majors".

Dear Nial,

Yes I agree. If you are reframing the language around these and going to call them electives instead then I don't think developing mid level learning outcomes would be appropriate. It could confuse the curriculum mapping structure if units of study are given mid-level learning outcomes. From what you describe it would be better for them to be treated as units of study. In the light of this, I imagine the Academic Board will not require MLOs (though that is their decision of course).

Cheers,
Peter

Hi Peter,

As we discussed on the phone, and as has been discussed at USC, the pharmacy major are not really majors but electives.

As we are not going to make them compliant as majors, and will do the paperwork to get them classified as electives instead, then it makes no sense to complete and submit CLOs to the Academic Board for them.

Thanks
