STUDY LEADERSHIP SKILLS BY DISTANCE: 7-WEEK COURSE DESIGNED FOR BUSY PROFESSIONALS

FULLY ONLINE 7-WEEK UNIT WITH NO RESIDENTIAL COMPONENT

This program is designed for busy professionals and is delivered completely by distance via an online interactive classroom. Students are not required to attend any residentials. With a small cohort of 7-10 students, you will receive guidance, feedback and support from your facilitator and work closely with other students in the program in an online collaborative classroom environment.

COURSE OVERVIEW

Leadership skills are quickly becoming an essential part of every manager's skill set in an environment where there is an increasing demanding for more leaders that have the capability to influence the direction of animal health and welfare, as well as initiate policy changes and manage emerging issues in the areas of animal health, zoonoses, food safety, animal health economics and policy development. This unit aims to develop your leadership management skills by focussing on social intelligence and communication skills; strategy and decision-making skills; ethics and management systems and organisational design. You will also be taught how to lead teams, manage yourselves and your careers, and also how to engage your stakeholders in the process of developing these skills.

NO PRE-REQUISITES

You are not required to have any assumed knowledge prior to doing this course, only the ability to reflect on all your experiences in the workplace, as a professional, as a manager and as a leader.

ABOUT THE FACILITATOR

Shashanna Evans is a behavioural consultant and an adjunct faculty instructor at the Australian Graduate School of Management in the University of NSW. A clinical psychologist and Director of Behavioural Insights Pty. Ltd., she is particularly well known in both the public and private sectors for her psychological approach to managerial and leadership skills. At present her time is apportioned to clinical practice, CEO mentoring, and teaching for the Australian Graduate School of Management and the University of Sydney. In addition to academic publications, she has written two books for the general public - Make your Mark, published by Longman Cheshire is directed towards young adults in search of basic assertion skills. What it Takes, published by Pitman was originally written for young adults but has found a wider following in industry as it simplifies interpersonal and persuasive skills.
