

You are here:

TEACHING @ SYDNEY

February 2013

New to research supervision? Become a registered supervisor by March

If you are keen to start supervising research students, you might find it useful to complete the Foundations for Research Supervision (FRS) program, which is a self-paced program that takes 10-12 hours in total. Doing the program involves completing online modules on topics such as running successful supervisory meetings with your student and understanding the examination process, and then taking part in a face-to-face Supervision Forum, either in your Faculty or through the ITL. The next University-wide Supervision Forum hosted by the ITL will be held on Friday 22nd February - 1pm to 3pm, Camperdown Campus.

To find out more about the FRS Program, which is free of charge for University staff, click here. Once you have completed the required modules you can register for the final component of the Program, the Supervision Forum. To register for the upcoming February Forum, click here. Please note that face-to-face Forums fill quickly.

If you have any questions about the FRS please contact Susan Robinson.
